Skills and Experience: University student - Computer Science with Games Technology

I have been following the TES Renewal project for a very long time, and want to grab any opportunity available to help its development. I have played Morrowind, spent countless hours on oblivion, and modded Skyrim beyond recognition.

As a computer science student, who has thus far only done hobbyist coding and modding, the time has come to step it up, and get some experience in a big project. Although my aim is to work in game development though my quickly developing coding skills, in a wide range of programming languages, I believe I am not at a point where I could realistically help the coding/scripting team, until I have more specific skills with papyrus and the workings of this huge project.

QA testing seems like the perfect place for me to help.

I am hoping that my beginners knowledge in Papyrus and creator's kit, will be useful, and I am eager to make a helpful contribution to the project. My passion for TES is unquestionable, and I will willingly put my free time between lessons and studying to work on testing every single detail, reproducing bugs, and making concise, structured reports useful for all those involved in fixing them.

With time, I will be able to be more and more helpful, as I replay through Morrowind, gain more experience in Papyrus.

PS: Enjoy the cat
