Country of Residence: United States

Interested in: QA Testing

Level of Commitment: Moderately active

Skills and Experience: I have done slight bug testing before, not for any major games or major groups. I know quite a bit about the console and how to use it pretty well.

I have no experience with Papyrus, and I've played through Morrowind a few times and constantly read about the lore. My username ended up being Nerevguarine in quite a few places, due to that. Also currently recreating a melting pot of the Hlaalu, Telvanni, and Redoran houses (since they each seem to have their own distinct style) in Minecraft in my freetime, but can easily stop that project for this.

I can write reports, and I have plenty of time at the moment (read: next year or two), only taking online college classes that take up relatively little of my time, some days I could easily spend 6 hours straight working on this, and other times not spend any time at all.

Sorry I have nothing to submit for proof of skills, but I hope the image is funny enough for someone. Not sure what I could submit to show I know how to use the console.
